Decision date: 18 December 2019

Appeal Ref: APP/P1560/C/17/3189335

Land at 100 Colne Way, Point Clear Bay, Clacton-on-Sea, CO16 8LN

- The appeal is made under section 174 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 as amended by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.
 - The appeal is made by Mandy Kelly against an enforcement notice issued by Tendring District Council.
 - The enforcement notice, numbered 10/00612/BRCHC3, was issued on 9 October 2017.
 - The breach of planning control alleged in the notice is failure to comply with condition No 2 of a planning permission Ref TEN119/59 dated 7 May 1959 with amended plans approved on 5 November 1959 for construction of new chalets and Planning Permission TEN/119G/59 dated 23 March 1961 approving details of new chalets.
 - The development to which the permission relates is construction of new chalets.
 - The condition in question is No 2 which states that: The chalets shall be used for human habitation only during the period 1 March to 31 October in each year and during the winter months may be used for storage of household effects.
 - The notice alleges that the condition has not been complied with by the habitation (occupation) of this chalet between the period of 1 November and 28 February (29 in leap years) each year otherwise than in compliance with condition 2 of the said planning permission TEN/119/59 and condition 2 of the said planning permission TEN/119G/59.
 - The requirements of the notice are to:
 1. Comply with Condition 2 of planning permission TEN/119/59 dated 7 May 1959 and layout amended on 5 November 1959 by ceasing the habitation (occupation) of the chalet on the land between 1 November and 28 February (29 in leap years) each year.
 2. Comply with Condition 2 of Planning Permission TEN/119G/59 dated 23 March 1961 by ceasing the habitation (occupation) of the chalet on the land between 1 November and 28 February (29 February in leap years) each year.
 - The period for compliance with the requirements is three months.
 - The appeal is proceeding on the grounds set out in section 174(2)(a) and (d) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 as amended.

Procedural Matters

1. A number of appeals relating to several properties at Point Clear Bay were heard together at the above Inquiry. General evidence relating to flooding considerations and proximity to services and facilities, common to many appeals containing ground (a), including this one, was heard during Week 1 and presented on behalf of a number of appellants by Mrs Kelly, the appellant here. There was an opportunity for any matters specific to individual appeals to be heard throughout the remainder of the Inquiry.

2. Whilst no corrections are required to this Notice, it has been necessary to correct the period for compliance in relation to a number of the notices relating to other appeal properties. The Council's witness accepted that there should be a consistent compliance period across this group of appeals. Accordingly, I intend to vary the compliance period to 14 months to correspond with the longest period specified amongst this set of appeal notices should the Notice be upheld.

Decision

3. The appeal is allowed and the enforcement notice is quashed.

Reasons

Ground (d)

Main Issues

4. The time limits for taking enforcement action are set out in Section 171B of the Act. In these appeals S171B(3) applies which states that in the case of any other breach of planning control, no enforcement action may be taken after the end of the period of ten years beginning with the date of the breach.
5. For the appeal on ground (d) to succeed the onus is upon the appellant to demonstrate, on the balance of probability, that the condition referred to in the enforcement notice has been breached for a continuous period of ten years or more prior to the date of the issue of the Enforcement Notice; in other words that the property has been occupied during the winter period for 10 consecutive years without compliance with the condition.

The Legal points

6. A Breach of Condition Notice (BoCN) was issued in 2012 that relates to the same breach. The point was made on behalf of the appellant that it was too late for the Council to take further enforcement action because S171B (4)(b) explains that the preceding sub-sections (those subsections that set out the time limits beyond which no action may be taken), do not prevent the taking of further enforcement action in respect of any breach of planning control if, during the period of four years ending with that action being taken, the local planning authority have taken or purported to take enforcement action in respect of that breach. This is often referred to as the 'second bite provision' as it allows the local planning authority to take further action outside of the time limits set out in S171B(1), (2) and (3) but still rely on the date of the earlier action. It does not however impose a 4-year time limit within which the Council can take further action when that further action is taken within the time limits set out in those preceding sub-sections.
7. The Council properly conceded that it was not relying on the second bite provisions, accepting that it was too late to do so. I agree that the current enforcement notice was issued too late for the Council to rely on S171B(4)(b). In this case, the relevant date against which the ten-year period should be assessed is therefore on or before 9 October 2007.
8. Nevertheless, the BoCN from 2012 remains in force. The Council therefore submits that the continued occupation of the property after the date specified for compliance with the BoCN, was and continues to be a criminal offence.

- Accordingly, the Council say the appellant cannot benefit from a claim that an on-going breach, after this compliance date, would contribute to the ten-year 'immunity' period, as the appellant would benefit from their own wrong doing.
9. In support of this submission the Council relies on the judgement of Welwyn Hatfield v SSCLG v Beesley [2011] UKSC 15 ('the Welwyn Hatfield judgement'). In this case Mr Beesley was claiming he had gained immunity for the use of a building as a dwellinghouse. One of the issues involved consideration of the scope and application of the principle that, unless the contrary intention appears, statutes are to be construed to the effect that no one should be allowed to profit from his own wrong. The Court noted that Mr Beesley intended to deceive the Council from the outset by his statements in the planning application. This was positive deception in matters integral to the planning process and directly intended to undermine that process. The Court found that the principle applied despite acknowledging that Mr Beesley's conduct was "not identifiably criminal" and thus not only relevant where there has been the commission of a crime.
 10. In this case, there has been no positive deception on the part of the appellant. This is a point accepted by the Council. However, the Council submits that there has nevertheless been the commission of a crime as a result of non-compliance with the BoCN, which is still on-going, and so the principle that no one should benefit from their own wrong doing is clearly applicable.
 11. However, I consider the circumstances differ in this case. The Council has not been deceived due to the actions of the appellant in this case so that it 'missed' an opportunity to take any action in the same way that had occurred in Welwyn Hatfield, due to the actions of Mr Beesley. Indeed, it did serve a BoCN. The Council could, at any time since serving the BoCN, have sought to prosecute non-compliance with it through the Magistrates Court; it still could. The Council has simply chosen not to do so to date. That is different to the circumstances in Welwyn Hatfield where the Council could not have taken action within the required time limits in the first place because the breach was purposely hidden to prevent them from doing so.
 12. Furthermore, the Welwyn Hatfield judgement also relates to an appeal against the refusal of a certificate of lawfulness rather than an appeal against an enforcement notice – Mr Beesley was therefore trying to establish that the use as a dwellinghouse was lawful. That is not the case here. Rather the question before me, is whether at the date when the notice was issued, no enforcement action could be taken in respect of any breach of planning control which may be constituted by those matters. I recognise that under section 191(3) of the Act, it is clear that the failure to comply with any condition or limitation subject to which planning permission has been granted will only be lawful if the time for taking enforcement action has expired (S191(3)(a)) and it does not constitute a contravention of any of the requirements of any enforcement notice or breach of condition notice then in force (S191(3)(b)). However, no certificate of lawfulness is being sought alongside this ground (d) appeal.
 13. On that basis, it seems to me that a breach that cannot be lawful due to the existence of a BoCN, can nevertheless give rise to a successful appeal on ground (d) and the quashing of the notice.

The evidence

14. I turn now to consider the evidence specific to this case. All evidence in relation to this ground of appeal was given under oath.
15. In the case of a continuing requirement condition, such as the case here, discontinuance of the offending activity will bring an end to that particular breach. The clock starts again with any subsequent breach. The period of compliant activity needs to be significant and not de minimis, as a matter of fact and degree. The cessation of that breach means that the clock would start again for any fresh breach of the condition. The question to be asked during any period of compliant occupation is whether enforcement action could have been taken against a breach of the condition.
16. The appellant's written and oral evidence, given under oath, is that she has occupied the property all year round since she purchased it on 30 March 2007. A bank statement dated 3 April 2007 is provided as evidence of when the appellant started living in the property. The Council do not dispute that this is the case. Indeed, the Council Tax records show no discounts applied for any periods of non-occupation during this time and therefore support the appellant's oral account given to the Inquiry.
17. Accordingly, the evidence submitted does demonstrate that the property has been occupied in breach of the relevant condition for a continuous period of 10 years or more. The appeal on ground (d) therefore succeeds and the Notice will be quashed.
18. Whilst my decision results in the quashing of the notice because I have found it was too late for the Council to take action in this case, it has no effect on the Breach of Condition Notice that is not before me. I recognise that success on ground (d) and the resultant quashing of the notice, may not therefore be of much comfort to the appellant in the knowledge that any on-going breach would still appear not to be lawful as the BoCN would still exist. However, it would be a matter for the Council to decide whether to bring any prosecution proceedings against the BoCN.
19. Furthermore, as the Notice will be quashed, there is no alleged breach against which the deemed planning application and ground (a) can be assessed. Accordingly, I am unable to proceed to determine whether planning permission should be granted in this case.

Conclusion

20. For the reasons given above I conclude that the appeal should succeed on ground (d). Accordingly the enforcement notice will be quashed. In these circumstances the appeal under ground (a) as set out in section 174(2) to the 1990 Act as amended and the application for planning permission deemed to have been made under section 177(5) of the 1990 Act as amended do not need to be considered.
